

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF KERRVILLE

Presbyterians in Kerrville shared a Union Church with other denominations before a congregation was formally organized in 1888. A small wooden church built that year was replaced by this structure in 1923. Prominent features of the Beaux Arts style sanctuary include a monumental two-story wooden entry with flanking Doric columns, classical pediment and decorative details, and large arched stained glass windows. Recorded Texas Historic Landmark – 1987

Early settlers to Kerrville met for worship services in the Union Church built in 1885. In 1888, seven charter members of the Presbyterian Congregation received funds to build their own church. Through the years the congregation has grown along with the community, building new facilities to accommodate its membership and activities. Innovative outreach programs included radio broadcasts and services at ranching communities west of Kerrville. The congregation continues to serve the community with various activities including educational and outreach ministries. (1996)
